HAMMERSTEIN RETURNS.

Success in London; Process-Servers at Home.

New York, Jan. 6.—Oscar Hammerstein, erstwhile owner of the Manhattan opera house and now promoting opera in London, arrived in New York yesterday on the Lusitania to "attend to a little business and return to England, if possible, as early as next Wednesday.

A number of friends and a number of process servers greeted Hammerstein as he stepped ashore. Four summonses were served in about as many minutes. Three were in suits for alleged breach of contract; the fourth involves a bill for a floral horseshoe. Mr. Hammerstein said he had struck London "deaf, dumb and blind" with his opera venture, and was making a great success. He added that he had not seriously considered making an operatic venture in New Orleans or San Francisco.

Some reasons why the wage earner re fighting for the eight-hour day-In the first place we want fewer idle mer and more work in this country. We want to see and we hope the day is not far distant when we shall see an eight hour law all over the land and rigidly enforced in every state, every city, every town and every village in this country. We believe it will be advantageous to every wage earner, to the community in which we live and for the best interests of society. Too long hours make the workers poor workers; shorter hours we believe will produce better results. The reduction in the hours of labor have increased knowledged, decreased intemperance, made better homes, happier wives and children, brighter and more prosper ous firesides, and in every way bene tited the social relations, promoted happiness and improved the moral, economi cal and financial conditions of the prolucing masses of our land. This, my friends, is why we are in the trade unon movement for we believe there is time for everything: Time to work, time to play, time to eat, time to sleep, time to die; but the only time for the wage workers to get into the umon and become union men and women is now Alex.
